Problem Statement

At the University of South Carolina, students often struggle to find available study spaces at the Thomas Cooper Library, especially during midterms and finals. The overcrowding leads to wasted time spent searching for seating, increased stress levels, and reduced opportunities for focused studying. Because of this, students' productivity and academic performance are negatively impacted. This highlights the need for a more efficient solution to help manage study space availability at TCoop.